We exercise every care to see that only first quality bulbs are sent out, free from mixture, disease and thrips, as we want only satisfied customers. We are always ready to adjust any reasonable complaint to the satisfaction of the customer, but, we will under no circumstances be held responsible for more than the amount paid for bulbs.

This is my tenth year as a commercial gladiolus grower, and there are many of the better known growers throughout the U.S. who buy from us year after year, - satisfied customers. Our prices are low, but prices alone do not mean satisfaction. May we have the pleasure of adding your name to our list ?

THE GLADIOLUS THRIP.

This insect now seems to have spread pretty well all over the U.S., and I am told that it has appeared in two places in British Columbia, where they have had an embargo on gladiolus bulbs for several years. So it seems that they just will spread about. The safest thing to do is to treat all the bulbs you plant, whether your own or those you have purchased. The mere fact that a casual inspection of a field at blooming time shows no thrip damage is no absolute proof that there will not be thrips and eggs on the bulbs in storage. Play safe, - treat everything! We do. Our bulb houses are treated several times during the winter with Cyanogas, and all bulbs will be shipped out packed with naphthalene flakes.

All these bulbs were dug and are being handled by employees receiving N.R.A. wages.

RALPH J. POMMERT,

Gladiolus grower,

PACIFIC, WASHINGTON.
